Yessiree, let's have fireworks and cold beers!

One thing that I really like about Midnight is that FFG has focused on creating a regular series of low cost but useful supplements.

Right or wrong, I see lots of supplements as a sign of a healthy line.

Purely for roleplaying purposes.

The corporate revolution will collapse if we refuse to buy what they are selling
- their ideas, their version of history, their wars, their weapons, their notion of inevitability.

The core book is great, but the quality of the supplements has yet to be decided

Where other settings are set around compelling wars, conflicts or regions, it is the personalities behind the NPCs of Rokugan that really give the setting shape

Well, its official, "Off My Shelf" is now a series- at least, if you count two issues as a "series."

What sympathy I had for Paris was the rumor thundering around the internet and able that NBC would pay her one million dollars for a exclusive interview when she gets out of jail.

Overall, Rokugan is a very deep setting, with complex alliances and plotlines that all but scream to be role played.

So much less material than my last one and much less completeness.

Stories that are different from the ones we're being brainwashed to believe.

The only issues I have with Midnight are that the bindings of some of the core books were pretty poor.

Rokugan has some of the most interesting and detailed NPCs around.

We recommend you drink while playing this game in order to get in kinship with your character.

When George Bush says "you're either with us, or you are with the terrorists" we can say "No thank you.

But that shit ain't the truth.

The air was chill in the pre-dawn light.

Even more appealing is the Samurai core class, the Daisho ability really makes them the highlight of the setting while not quite overpowering fighters as a useful combat class.

Doubt it, but you never know your luck and there is no accounting for taste.

We, the taxpayers will most certainly get the bill for this search for Presidential Polyps.

A big, BIG push for New Orleans!
